I can only obtain 32 tablets at a time from pharmacy, some times unable to get to pharmacy, and dependant on others. Do not object to paracetamol being taken off prescription due to cost to NHS, just means i will have to buy every 4-5 days , and at times be reliant on family members to obtain when unable to go out.	3/24/2016 2:38 AM

Gluten free foods and medicines for self-limiting illness

1	Glutenfree food is expensive, At times in the past especially in winter it can be difficult to obtain bread even on prescription, manufacturing and deliver problems have been blamed when discussed with pharmacy. You can buy certain brands of bread at major supermarkets varies from £1.50 to £4.20 for 1 loaf. Quite often the bread you buy, and occasionally prescription bread fall to pieces making it unusable to make a sandwich. I have a mixture of prescribed food and shop bought.I have bread and crackers on prescription. In the past i have had plain biscutes on prescription. Now a lot more choice of biscutes in supermarkets so do not get on prescription. biscutes vary from 97p to £4.00 for 8 to 10 biscutes, a treat rather than a dietary staple. Coeliac disease is a auto immune disease and if glutenfree diet is not adhered to then many health problems occur. I have concerns that if prescriptions are withdrawn then either people will not follow glutenfree diet (low income people who do not get free prescriptions) or will cut out fiber and vitamin supplements that are in prescribed items. I have worked all my life with the exception of 6 weeks aged 18 when i had to claim "The dole". At that time if you where coeliac you received a extra 75p to assist in dietary need if my memory is correct.I am now in receipt of DLA. I pay for regular dental treatment and eye check ups and glasses. If it was not for both my husbands pension and my benefit (Mainly husbands pension) i would not be able to buy glutenfree products. He already complains how much glutenfree products cost. I do not believe that the NHS should be charged above supermarket cost for bread , crackers and other prescribed items such as flour and cereal for children( and adults if they get cereal on prescription). Can a voucher scheme not be tried out for diagnosed coeliacs, this could cut down on cost and prevent wastage. Glutenfree products do tend to go off very quickly once opened.I was in receipt of free prescriptions, for some reason at the moment have not received this year as yet. If I have to pay £100 for a yearly prescription certificate then this is another hardship, but will have no choice in the matter due to the amount of medication and cream's that i have been prescribed, which are regularly reviwed by GP and various consultants.When i say i believe it is the right of coeliacs( Your survey states gluten intolerance ) i dont see it as any difference than diabetics requiring insulin, people with thyroid problem needing medication or schizophrenic's requiring anti psycotic treatments. These people have no choice in requiring help from NHS in prescribed items.	3/24/2016 2:38 AM
2	I purchase these on prescription on a pre-payment certificate. I could not afford to purchase the products in the shops and as this is a permanent condition, I also feel that I should not be penalised.	3/22/2016 4:59 PM
3	I do not care for someone with this condition.	3/21/2016 6:59 PM
4	only get bread and pita bread on prescription as these items are expensive in super maket. should not stop prescribing these. can be limited not stopped totally	3/21/2016 3:58 PM

6	gluten free bread and pita bread are expensive in super maket I only get those on prescription buy some gluten free food from super market	3/21/2016 3:35 PM
7	You can't buy the make of food my daughter eats in the supermarkets.	3/21/2016 1:58 AM
8	I receive only bread on prescription. The cost of purchasing in a supermarket is prohibitive and if it were no longer available on prescription I would ultimately lose this basic food item from my diet. The cost per 100g of a gluten free loaf is roughly double that of an ordinary loaf.	3/20/2016 9:33 AM
9	I find I have to be careful in supermarkets, some gluten free items they sell contain oats which I react to, and I am never sure which other items may be contaminated in the processing. The juvella flour is normal flour with the gluten taken out as opposed to naturally gluten free flour, juvella is infinitely superior and is not available in supermarkets.	3/17/2016 10:04 AM
10	I thinkit should only be prescribed to those with a diagnosed Celiac condition	3/16/2016 2:30 PM
11	The range of gf products is limited, or non-existent, in the shops and VERY expensive. Three to four times as much in some cases. I have mostly bread on prescription and I think it is essential to prescribe this as it is a basic necessity.	3/9/2016 1:27 PM
12	Choices are limited in supermarkets, and extremely expensive	3/8/2016 7:15 PM
13	I only have fresh bread and bread mix. I do not take advantage.	3/7/2016 4:55 PM
14	I only have bread and flour - I buy everything else from the supermarket. I don't abuse the system. I paid for prescriptions in the past but I am now 76 years old. I only have 8 loaves a month. 4 packets of flour every 3 months. The bread and flour is not available in the supermarket and I suffer with allergies. (Julvela fresh white bread - Glutaflin multi purpose flour).	3/7/2016 3:33 PM

Gluten free foods and medicines for self-limiting illness

15	Normally, supermarket g-f food is limited, the supply is often unreliable, and in one major supermarket I used to use g-f items were commonly well out of date. I do buy g-f food from all the supermarkets within reach and am grateful that g-f is available in supermarkets but have had a number of issues with contaminated items, too. I have a concern that, when the fad for g-f food is over, availability in supermarkets will decline. As far as products available, I don't find it possible to eat supermarket bread regularly, without stomach problems. The only pasta available in supermarkets is normally corn pasta, which again I don't find very digestible. I can get healthier options on prescription, such as teff flour and brown rice pasta. Also, I can get products on prescription that don't contain potato flour, which I'm not able to eat on a regular basis. I rely on prescription for staple items, which are not available in the supermarkets.	3/7/2016 10:52 AM
16	My daughter pays an annual prescription charge to ensure she pays for each and every prescription in line with current law. I think it's abhorrent that you want to remove the prescribing of essential food items.	3/5/2016 10:36 AM
17	You are safe with prescribed g/f items as it's very easy to miss gluten in items sold over the counter. I am still learning which products have gluten in. Not only that I have been very poorly when making 'wrong' choices innocently and I have been a coeliac for over 25years.	3/5/2016 2:58 AM
18	Gluten free bread is ridiculously expensive and no choice in the supermarket	3/4/2016 11:44 PM
19	I am eligible for free prescriptions but rarely get gf food on prescription but there is a fibre pasta which is not available at a supermarket and I may request 3/4 boxes per year. However, I consider myself fortunate to be able to afford to buy gf food. But it is expensive, bread for example is circa £3 for a small loaf which is more than twice the price of 'normal' bread, as are most gf foods. On this basis I have to say it is wrong to totally stop providing gf foods on prescription to adults. The consequences of not 'sticking to, a gf diet can also cost dear.	3/3/2016 9:54 PM
20	if I did not get the gluten free food on prescription then it would be very difficult to follow a gluten free diet because I cannot afford to buy the items from the supermarket because they are too expensive and my only income comes from disability benefits	3/1/2016 5:10 PM

4	I only have Juvela Bread on prescription. I buy Gluten free biscuits and flour - and bake my own cakes. I disagree with your research that supermarkets' prices for Gluten free products are comparable to conventional equivalents - particularly bread. A good quality palatable small loaf costs about three times the price. I think some low earning people and some pensioners could find this unaffordable.	3/8/2016 12:12 PM

11	For many years I suffered from bouts of chronic fatigue. At the same time, successive GP Surgeries failed to diagnose I had Coeliac Disease. A relative who is a doctor finally identified that Coeliac Disease could be the cause of my chronic fatigue. I was diagnosed with Coeliac Disease and so received a Gluten-Free prescription. My health slowly improved; however I lost my job and my career due to prolonged ill health and failure by the NHS to diagnose. I spent years on half pay / no pay / unemployment benefits, and so Gluten-free prescription food has been a vital part of my budget on a low income. Before the NHS withdraws GF prescriptions, it should ensure it can properly and promptly diagnose Coeliac Disease and so avoid peoples' lives being wrecked by failure to diagnose, as happened in my case. If the CCG would like to talk to me about my experience, in order to improve diagnosis rates, I would be happy to oblige.	3/14/2016 5:44 PM

16	Epilepsy	3/5/2016 8:47 AM
17	I have a form of colitis which apparently seemingly is related to being a coeliac. As I suffer from kidney disease my medication for this is a steroid, I therefore have calcium tablets on prescription which it seems the new policy would not be available on prescription. I was diagnosed pre diabetic which I am trying to control through diet as I don't wish to to further medication. It seems to me that I have chronic illnesses which the new proposals mean I won't have access to certain medications which help to keep me well. Apart from initial visits to my GP, all consultations and tests have been funded by myself therefore I am fully aware of the costs incurred and believe not providing items on prescription could cost more in the 'long run'.	3/3/2016 9:54 PM
